

Etymology of Consciousness

Excerpted from an essay on the word "Unconscious," from: Williams R. Keywords: a vocabulary of culture and society. (2nd ed.) London: Fontana Press, 1988; pp. 320-24. For an anthology on Consciousness and the difference between Higher and Lower Conscience, see Compassion the Spirit of Truth, Appendix I, in our Major Works Series. — ED. PHIL.

Conscious

Conscious came into English in e C17, from fw consciūs, L, rw con, L — together, scire, L — to know.

- | | | |
|-----|---|--|
| i | A sense related to a kind of animism in which inanimate things are described as aware of human actions. | "To these conscious stones we two pilgrims were alike known and near."
(Emerson on Stonehenge, 1856) |
| ii | As in the root words, knowing something with another or others. | "Where two, or more men, know of one and the same fact, they are said to be Conscious of it one to another."
(Hobbes, 1651) |
| iii | Self-aware. | "Being so conscious unto my selfe of my great weakenesse."
(Ussher, 1620) |
| iv | Actively aware and reflecting. | "To be happy or miserable without being conscious of it, seems to me utterly inconsistent and impossible."
(Locke, 1690) |
| v | " Self-conscious ," with implications of vanity or calculation. | "Too conscious of their face."
(Pope, 1714) |
| vi | Active and waking. | "When at last he was conscious."
(Lytton, 1841) |
| vii | Distinguished a class of beings, as in thinking or rational . | "Thinking or conscious beings."
(Watts, 1725) |

Consciousness

- 1 Used from mC17 in senses applied from the senses of unconscious ii, iii, iv above; vi from mC19.
- 2 A new sense, with indirect relation to C2, also developed from mC19: consciousness as a term for the mutual self-awareness of a group.
"National consciousness,"
"class consciousness."

- 3 The most general sense is strongly sustained by an increasing awareness (consciousness) of motives and preferences of which someone had not previously been conscious (iv) or is still unconscious (negative of iv).

More specific common senses are:

The waking state of the mind;

The knowledge which the mind has of anything;

Awareness;

Thought.

Unconscious

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1 Recorded from eC18 in Blackmore's | “unconscious we these motions never heard.” |
| In a sense clearly negative of unconscious (iv above). | “A kind of respect perhaps unconsciously paid.” (Johnson, 1779) |
| 2 Seems to imply “not known,” almost in the later sense of “not knowable,” rather than simply “not aware.” | “Unconscious causes only still impart Their utmost skill, their utmost power exert.” (Blackmore, 1712). |
| 3 (a) In Christabel unconscious has the general sense of “unaware,” the negative of (C4), but the association with forced seems to introduce a dimension which, in including involuntary unawareness, has elements of a later meaning. | (a) “With forced unconscious sympathy.” (Coleridge, Christabel) |
| (b) Probably the first use of the phrase the unconscious — seems to imply two normal categories, conscious and unconscious , though with a significant priority to the former which, in this instance, is the source. | (b) “The conscious is so impressed on the unconscious as to appear in it.” (Coleridge, 1817) |
| (a) In C19, physical senses of both conscious and unconscious developed. | (a) “He was knocked unconscious.” |
| (b) However, the line between physical and psychological conditions of consciousness was difficult to draw. | (b) “Sleep, fainting, coma, epilepsy and other ‘unconscious’ conditions.” (William James, 1890). |

- (c) Under hypnosis very different and controversial interpretations of these states have been made, and conscious and unconscious have become variable keywords within them.
- 4 (d) Many physical actions, within ordinary consciousness, were defined as unconscious in a new sense — as not requiring conscious initiation or control, or indeed as not capable of either, as in certain fundamental physical processes. This specialised sense was attached to sense iv above of unconscious and its negative.
- 5 Freud's unconscious has three elements: of processes:
- (a) dynamically repressed from (conscious) awareness;
- (b) capable of being made conscious (brought to awareness and reflection) only by special techniques — hypnosis, psychoanalysis;
- (c) not under voluntary control, as in the new physical sense noted above, but without a limitation to physical causes.
- 6 The unconscious.
The unconscious mind.
- The collective unconscious.
- The original definitions imply that what has become unconscious was once (but too painfully) conscious, and that the sense of unconscious as “unknowable” is specialised to the individual concerned; the unconscious can be made conscious by the application of particular skills.
- Freud's relatively precise senses become difficult when they move from their generalisation as processes to a generalised condition. The dynamic sense of something being made unconscious is often replaced, in these general terms, by the assumption of a primary and autonomous unconscious mind or being.
- This is especially true in Jung's hypothesis, which as a common human property precedes (both in time and in importance) the ordinary development of consciousness. But it is also true of more general uses, in which the unconscious (not in the physical sense of fundamental and “involuntary” bodily processes, but in the sense of the generation of basic feelings and ideas) it taken not only as stronger than conscious mental and emotional activity, but as its true (if ordinarily hidden) source.

Students should be fully conversant with the metaphysical concepts and learning aids set out in the same series, particularly with those prefixed with “Proposition 1.”